MARIETTA DAILY LEADER

MONDAY, FEB. 24, 1896

PERSONAL AND LOCAL.

—Indications point to a large attendance and pleasant time at the dance to be given Tuesday night at the I. O. O. F. Hall, West Side, by the Lobl-dell Base Ball Club.

—In Mayor's court Saturday Joseph Barnez, of Eight Mile, was fined $5 and costs for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. George Kahn, of Rochester, Pa., and John Leonard, of Zanesville, were given the same dose. The woman who was arrested with the latter, notice of which appeared in Saturday's Leader, was ordered to leave town, but refused, saying that Kahn was her husband and she would not leave without him.

—The carrier boys employed at Eells' and Johnston's news stands engaged in a lively scrap on Butler street Saturday. The ill feeling between the boys is said to have grown out of the recent change of agency of the Cincinnati Tribune.

—The many friends of Allan Bruce, formerly of this city, will be interested to learn of his marriage last week at Galveston, Texas, to a Miss Miller, of that place.

—Clarence R. Luchs, the seven-year-old son of Morris Luchs, narrowly escaped drowning Saturday afternoon. With a party of small boys about his own age he was skating on the old canal in the rear of the Eells building, when the ice broke and young Luchs was precipitated into the water. After breaking the ice for a considerable radius around him the little fellow was rescued by his companions, none the worse for his cold bath and narrow escape.

—May Smith Robbins delighted a fair sized audience at the Auditorium Saturday night in Little Trixie. The play is a genuine comedy, full of boisterous merriment, with a plot easily followed. The support given Miss Robbins was good in some respects, but very ordinary in others. The songs and dances with which the play is replete were the chief features of the entertainment.

—John H. Snodgrass, who is doing literary work at Columbus for the Commercial Gazette and Ohio State Journal, came down Saturday to spend Sunday with his parents.

—Eight new names are posted for admission to membership in the Marietta Club.

—H. F. Kraft is the first to announce himself as a candidate for Mayor. His card appears in this issue.

—Monroe Shrewsbury, of Parkersburg, spent Saturday and Sunday with friends in this city.

—Marshal Parlin is in receipt of a card from the chief of police at Cleveland offering a reward of $200 for the arrest of Michael Clavie, who shot and killed Mike Laneman Feb. 15. Clavie is 35 years of age, 5 feet 6 inches tall, weighing about 150 pounds, with brown hair, blue eyes, red face, reddish-brown mustache, and wore a blue coat, blue yatching cap and black ribbed pants.

—L. A. Bevan is here from Akron on a visit to old friends.

—An intoxicated young man named Ott Muggage was found about three o'clock Sunday morning in the alley back of Seyler's and was locked up by Officer Babcock. He will answer before the Mayor this morning.

—Bishop Boyd Vincent will preach at St. Luke's Episcopal church tomorrow evening and will administer the rite of confirmation.

—Dr. Stuckenburgh preached at the Baptist church last night to a large congregation. He is an attractive, forceful speaker, an intellectual man and fervent Christian. Dr. Stuckenburgh will deliver five lectures on Sociological subjects this week at Andrews Hall.

—Mr. and Mrs. John Langenberg, of Beverly, were guests of friends in the city Saturday.

—Mr. William T. Morris, formerly of the wholesale notion firm of Sprague & Morris, this city, has purchased a one-half interest in the general merchandise business of W. H. Pedicord, at Waterford.

—Mr. William Blake has purchased the one-half interest of Oscar Webster in the Beverly-Marietta packet Sonoma.

—Mr. C. W. James was at Vincent Saturday, on business.

—Six couples of the young friends of Miss Lottie Baum, Washington Street, surprised that young lady Friday evening, and a very pleasant time was spent. Ice cream and cake were served.

CREMATED.

Peter Angle and Wife Burned to Death in Their Home.

The Building Entirely Consumed and Only Bones of the Victims Found.

A Horrible Saturday Morning Fatality on Congress Run in Waterford Township.—A Complete Story by Hustling Leader Correspondents.

SPECIAL TO DAILY LEADER.

WATERFORD, O., Feb. 23.—Not since the Saner tragedy has Washington county been shocked by a fatality of the horrible and ghastly proportions of that which occurred between five and six o'clock this morning two miles below this village. The home of Peter Angle, Sr., is now in ashes and the bodies of Mr. Angle and his wife were burned almost to dust in the ruins.

When word of the catastrophe reached here the Leader correspondent hastened at once to the scene. When he arrived the residence was entirely consumed and all that remained of Mr. and Mrs. Angle were a few charred and blackened bones and shreds of roasted flesh.

Peter Angle and his wife, both over 70 years of age, lived alone in a log farm house about two miles east of Waterford, on Congress Run. They were well known throughout the entire section of western Washington county.

For several days previous to the fire Mr. Angle had been quite ill, his death being almost hourly expected. His wife was blind and during his illness his children and neighbors had been taking care of him and incidentally looking after Mrs. Angle.

Joseph Angle and John Cross were with them Friday night until one o'clock, at which hour they covered up the fire in the old-fashioned wide fireplace, extinguished the lamps and left the old couple snugly and comfortably tucked in bed.

When Joseph Angle returned this morning between the hours of five and six o'clock to attend to the wants of his parents he discovered the house enveloped in flames. The fire had made such progress that he found it impossible to enter or even look into the building. He saw, however, that the door was about half open, but the fierce heat drove him back and he could render the helpless inmates no assistance.

As soon as the flames had subsided sufficiently to make it possible the remaining logs were torn away. All that was left of the body of Mrs. Angle was found lying where she had fallen, evidently on her back, and was charred beyond recognition. The body was lying near the door and a piece of charred handkerchief under the neck alone enabled the friends to identify it.

The body of Mr. Angle was supposed to be in the corner where the bed stood, as he was so ill and feeble, but the Leader correspondent procured a pitchfork and by walking out on a plank over the burning embers, found his remains lying in a position that showed beyond possibility of doubt that he had fallen head-foremost into the fire. The only parts of Mr. Angle's body that were not entirely destroyed were a small part of the skull, the liver and kidneys. Underneath the ghastly find was a bit of clothing that served to identify the remains.

The theory is that Mr. Angle had arisen for some purpose and in his weakness fell into the fire-place. Mrs. Angle, in trying to rescue him from his terrible position, came in contact with the fire, her clothing ignited, setting fire to the house, and both perished without being able to reach the door, though the position of the remains of Mrs. Angle indicate that she tried to escape, but was overcome before she could get out of the house.

The fire seemed to have burned most fiercely in that part of the house where the remains of Mrs. Angle were found. The bones and charred pieces of flesh of the unfortunate couple were removed to the home of their son Joseph and prepared for burial in Salem cemetery Sunday. The entire neighborhood is inexpressibly shocked over the horrible affair.

Another Account.

SPECIAL TO DAILY LEADER.

BEVERLY, O., Feb. 23.—Between five and six o'clock this morning the dwelling house of Mr. Peter Angle, two miles down the Z. & O. R. and a short distance up Congress Run, was destroyed by fire and Mr. and Mrs. Angle perished in the flames. Both were well up in years and lived alone in an isolated spot. The manner in which the fire originated is not known, but one plausible theory is that Mrs. Angle got up to warm a flat-iron, and getting it too hot, the iron ignited the bed clothing. This theory is based on the fact that a flat-iron was found near where the bed stood.

Joseph Angle, a son of the old people, left the house shortly after midnight the night before and at that time everything was all right. The bones of both Mr. and Mrs. Angle were found in the ruins, those of the former near the hearthstone and the latter near the door, indicating that she made an effort to escape. The house, a log structure, was entirely consumed.

G.

—Saturday evening about 5:30 o'clock the Citizens Bank Block was the scene of a small fire. In a little partly-enclosed room over the stairway which leads to the second floor Mr. Dixon has a kitchen outfit where he indulges his tastes in conceiving good things in gastronomy. A small gas stove stood on the window sill with some sort of goodie simmering away upon it, and in some way the blaze was deflected downward upon the window sill. The fire worked its way through the oaken sill, and when it got there it found a good fuel up the side of the framework. Passing up the side of the frame it found an opening to the outside at the top, and it burst forth into flame and smoke. It did not have long to burn, however, for the fire department made its appearance, and Pipe-man Bizantz had turned one of the "chemicals" onto the blaze, and smothered it out. In about ten minutes after the fire was noticed the trouble and excitement were over, and peace once more reigned at the Bank corner. We presume Brother Dixon snipped out.
